Monday, April 24, the B.C. Supreme Court in Vancouver is set to resume certification hearings for a proposed class action lawsuit. It was brought by a group called CSASPP, the Canadian Society For The Advancement Of Science In Public Policy.

This is not a Trial, but simply procedural hearings to determine if the class action is to be certified (approved), and can go ahead. Even if certified, there is still a lot to be done afterwards.

There won't be livestreaming of the proceedings, but at least one person, Eva Chipiuk, is promising real-time updates on Twitter. It's explained here, in a short video clip.

The hearings started on December 12, 2022, and were supposed to have been concluded during the week of the 12th to the 16th. But things took a lot longer than expected, to be blunt.

CSASPP provides a page for their status updates, which is in reverse chronological order. If the court documents themselves are a bit overwhelming, this will provide a "Coles Notes" version.

Videos of the December 2022 hearings are available online.

Should this case go ahead, then Bonnie Henry, the "British Columbia Provincial Health Officer" would likely be forced to testify. And does she ever have things to answer for.

On a side note: it would be nice to see the issue of whether this "virus" exists confronted head on. After all, if the Government is lying about vaccines, masks, lockdowns, testing, contact tracing and pretty much everything else, why should we assume they tell the truth about viruses?

As for the Action4Canada suit, there's been no amended Notice of Civil Claim filed in the 8 months since the last one crashed spectacularly. The organization is still fundraising, on the premise that it will refile at some point. The group decided to file a baseless appeal, rather than do a rewrite, which was allowed. It's now used by the B.C. Law Society as a "teaching moment". Heck, even the OPCA hacks aren't really pushing this case anymore.

Below are a significant portion of the CSASPP documents. It's not exhaustive, but should provide readers with much needed background information. These can be saved or duplicated at will.

I have come to the conclusion that viruses don't exist, particularly in the way the media portrays them. I mean, c'mon – you have a viral infection when you test for antibodies; AND you have similar antibodies when you are immune? Get outta here. The "experts" should pony up some real proof, or go home!

They should have gone home a year ago! They don't even know what "follow the science".
